

After learning more about how religiosity in general can play an important role in the public life, it made me think about how I could play a better part. Understanding that my specific religious background can guide me in making decisions relative to important matters that effect public life such as climate change, laws, civil rights etc. I have changed some of my views regarding major social issues in the United States. For example, the social issue of abortion, Roe v Wade, has been brought up in recent years due to American Politics. As a young man, I believed abortion was wrong and spoke out against it when given the opportunity. Now, seeing the world in a different view, I have spoken in support to women whom have made the difficulty decision to carry out the procedure. Each woman I have talked to had their own specific reasoning for making the decision. Today, I stand in solidarity with many others in a “pro-choice” stance relative to abortion for the betterment of life for the woman.
