So in Korea is 928 M, of September 18.

0:08

JS: Okay, so Hello, my name is Jahaan, and I'm very excited about this interview today. What is your name? And do you consent to be interviewed today?

0:22

JH: My name is [REDACTED] Han. And I'm also excited. And I do consent to the interview.

0:29

JS: Sounds great. Where are you currently based?

0:33

JH: I'm in South Korea right now.

0:37

JS: Where were you when COVID hit? And when did you actually learn about COVID.

0:43

JH: Um, so when I was actually in Georgia, where my high school where I study, so I was, it was just like a normal day of high school, I was going through all the words and all the assignment and everything. And I actually knew about COVID-19 before because Korea had all the issues going on before like, it hit America. So I was getting news from my parents and my friends. And I was I was worried about them. But it didn't really affect me, because I didn't know it would hit America that fast. But it just suddenly did. And then the next day, I was actually kicked out of high school, the dorm. And they were actually asking us to leave because of all the things going on in the world. So yeah, that happened.

1:40

JS: Wow. And when you were discussing with your parents and your family, how did they describe the situation to be? Were they concerned? Like, it's a pandemic? Like it's going to get bad? Or were they like, oh, there's this thing going on? Like, what was their reaction? And how were they telling you about it? I'm just curious to know,

2:03

JH: well, they're there, they kind of, they kind of describe what's going on in Korea and how the government is handling it. But they were also concerned is the pandemic is not a pandemic, but if the virus will gonna like transfer to different countries and everything. Because they kind of knew that the virus is really contagious and everything. So they're kind of they're I think they had like a 50, they thought about 50/50 chance of going into pandemic or just like, contained in like, like East Asia part in it.

2:44

JS: So when did you decide to go back to Korea? Was it the day after? Or like, did you wait a few days, and then you flew back or how was

2:54

JH: so so our school they actually gave us. So the decision actually came out on Thursday. And we had to decide to like to stay in America or to leave like to leave to our own country. Until like Monday. So I had like that few days to decide on and the first day, I actually decided to stay in America and see how it's going. And I actually had a option to stay at my friend's house or my uncle's house. So I was like, trying to see how it's gonna go in America and everything. But the next day, I changed my decision because my parents were like talking about how it might be actually safer to come to Korea, because we don't know what's going to happen in America and all the like health like insurance and everything. We don't know if that's gonna cover if I get like affected and everything. So it was actually going back and forth about like going back to Korea or staying in America. And and thankfully, the plane ticket wasn't actually that hard to get. So I just like decided to come to Korea eventually after like three days or something like that.

4:17

JS: Yeah, I feel like for international students, it's always a bunch of other factors that we have. It's not just like a yes or no, yeah,

4:26

JH: no, I totally agree. Um,

4:29

JS: so what were your initial feelings towards the virus? And have they changed from what your feelings are currently towards the virus?

4:39

JH: Um, so my initial thought was actually that virus is just like, a normal, just like a little more contagious flu virus. That's literally what I thought because it is a retrovirus of the influenza and the flu. So that's what I thought and I am because it wasn't really like deadly, and everything I thought is not gonna be that bad. I don't, I didn't think it was gonna be this like, affected like globally affected and everything. But now I see it I'm just like, I'm not terrified of it. Because I know that even though I get infected, I wouldn't be that like, like suffering from it because I'm like young and healthy and everything, but I'm just worried about people around me who's not really like, as healthy as me like, my mom she's at, she was actually sick for and before getting going independent again everything so she's not in love or like really good health or anything. So I'm afraid of that of like me getting sick and actually transferring to her and everything. So I feel like my conception, or my thought about virus actually changed into more like that I should be careful about it. And I should be more cautious about, like how I act and everything.

6:06

JS: Definitely I agree with you. Yeah. Have you learned anything about yourself or the people around you, or just your surroundings or any thing that has kind of any learning moment that you've had during this virus? Personal it could be anything so.

6:27

JH: So I told you that we had to like leave our school and everything right. So that also meant that we were not having prom, senior prom and graduation. So I wasn't able to go to my graduation and prom and everything. So and we and it was like after the first semester and us getting all the acceptance and everything. So it was going to be our like fun time for the seniors. But we weren't able to do that. So that kind of taught me that I really could have spent more time with my friends. Because I was so like, my all my friends were We were just so focused on what we have to do college applications, finishing all the work. So it was just really overwhelming to us. So we were really focused on what's like right in front of us not like spending times with each other, and making memories and everything. So because we thought that we would have we would have that time eventually. But that didn't happen. So that actually taught me that like, when, when you have the time to spend with your loved one, you really have to, like you really have to have really have to be like I don't know how to say it. Catch the chance or like yeah, you have to really like know that something can happen in your in your life that you didn't expect. So you just have to go. How for life quality?

8:09

JS: Yeah, definitely. Like there's a lot of things that we all have taken for granted. And it's those things into perspective. And I agree with you have so how was the community you're currently in? How did it deal with the virus? So right now you're in Korea? Just curious to know, like, how they dealt with the virus initially how they're dealing with it right now? Um, what does the future of the virus look like within your community just to get an idea because in the us right now, it's doesn't look good?

8:49

JH: Well, Korea, it actually started, they actually responded to the virus really strongly at the first like from the first time. So they were doing all this like tracing tracking and testing and everything. And we actually they actually tested a lot of people. And it's still happening, but like, as the time passed, I still like all the new like, a mutant newly infected like number and rate goes down. People actually kind of like got you know, loose if I can say so the government's like their action also kind of loosened up. So they were actually like telling people like it's okay is it's not like totally fine but it's okay to slowly start going into like, our new our original economic cycle and everything and like origin my lifestyle, but it actually wasn't that like helpful to the situation, because as we loosened up, it actually loosened up a lot of people, a lot of citizens and everything. So it kind of caused a new wave of infected people, people and everything. And now after getting after like having like 400 new cases and 500 new cases a day, the government is they actually raised. Okay, so before going on to raising, so Korea now have like three steps of like alertness. So there's like first and second and third. So we're now we're in second. And we used to be in second, but that they actually rate to 2.5. But not going to third one the most like that one is almost like a lockdown and everything. So they didn't go there. But they actually raised to 2.5. So that it made people to not go to like public places, all the public places were like, closed, got closed. And a lot of like restaurants are closed and restaurants were not able to open their places until nine. So they have to close after nine. And so that actually affected people and that I think that helped the numbers went down. But I don't know if that'll actually like last, you know,

11:26

JS: that was very helpful. It kind of put things into perspective of how like they have the three tiers. And it's good to know. Um, so how has COVID affected your short term versus long term plans, if you want to share this because I know that a lot of pressure to like ask someone like what are your goals and stuff? It's good to kind of think about how COVID has affected us currently, but also like, in the long term and in the future.

12:00

JH: Mm hmm. Well, for the short term plans, I was actually planning to go like traveling for my senior like senior tree trip and everything before going to college. So that's what I wanted to do over summer. But as all the travels are like not allowed now I can't do that. And so like and the short term I was just I just had all this like fun plans for like graduating from high school and like my first year going to college. I just had all the fun plans do but it just didn't work. But like for the long term. I feel like now I feel like due to Coronavirus, I think we're going to have like new style of working there's going to be like remote remote, like working and everything. So I think I don't think like all the business will want to change into remote working and, but I feel like they're actually going to have options of it and they will have it like as like a plan to, to for the future setting if we have such thing like this. So I feel like being a pharmacy student I don't think I will be like affected with like remote remote learning if I go to like, actually end up being a pharmacist or like end up going to like pharmaceutical science company.

But I think

mys- I don't know, actually.

I think for the long term My job itself won't be that affected. But I would be more I would have to be more like cautious with like infectious diseases and how the trend is going and everything.

13:58

JS: Also good to know that you are a pharmacy . . .

14:00

JH: Yeah, I'm a pharmacy major. Yeah.

14:05

JS: Um, so this is a more personal question, but like you said, it's okay if I ask. Um, do you know of people that have been affected with COVID?

14:15

JH: Do you mean like, getting infected or just like their life affected?

14:22

JS: getting infected like this?

14:26

JH: I actually have a friend who was actually infected with coronavirus I didn't know about that until she actually got off got out of hospital. She didn't tell me anything. And I was kind of like upset about that cuz I wouldn't she and her friend and everything. I was kind of like sad about that. But she told me cuz she didn't tell me because she was like, she didn't want to worry. Like, she didn't want me to worry about her and everything. So I actually heard about that and she's doing fine, and she's, I'm not gonna say her name, but she's, she's also a freshman, but she's going to Georgia Tech. And she's doing I think she's doing okay. And I know she's doing okay, but I'm just worried about her because you know, coronavirus, even though you are infected once you can be infected again everything. So I was I'm just kind of worried about her.

15:28

JS: Yeah, yeah, definitely.

15:31

JH: But I'm glad that she feels better now. Yeah. Um, so what are ways that you personally have dealt with the pandemic? I know it can be frustrating to stay in all day and remotely. So there are little things that people like to do. That kind of keeps them busy, but also sane. wondering like, how have you dealt with the virus and how have you been able to kind of keep yourself in, like state of mind.

So while coronavirus was really like, like really widespread and there were a lot of like new cases every day, I actually stayed at my home for like, I don't know, like two months or something like that. I mostly stayed in my home unless I had to went out or, or less, like my family wanted to get out. So I did a lot of puzzles. Actually. I did a lot of jigsaw puzzle. So there's like, there's like three boxes of like, thousand piece. jigsaw puzzle it at my house. So my sister and I, we actually just finished one is with the Pegasus. So it was hard, but like we were doing like a lot of boats. And so in Korea, there's like, weird thing going on about like, trying to do like this challenge, challenge things and everything. So there is like, there was like a weird thing about like, like, trying to, like whipping like thousand times of coffee. So you can make it as like, like a little like, puffy little thing. Yeah, yeah. So they were actually doing that. And we actually did quite a lot, quite a few times. Because that actually that that is actually fun is hard. But it's but it's actually fun to do. And it's like a fun way to like spend time. So we were actually whipping. And it was Yeah, we wouldn't we spent times like that. It was funny, though,

JS: that, like a lot of people found the cooks and then during everybody was cooking and chopping it up so

17:55

JH: Definitely

17:56

JS: So this is my last and final question. But I'm just wanted to mention something that I think is very important. I feel like a lot of people have been talking about it during the pandemic, because just staying at home doesn't seem to be the thing for everybody. It's not an introvert, not everybody feels comfortable spending so much time with themselves. Think mental health is very, is a very important issue.

And especially during this pandemic, I think checking in on people is very crucial. So again, and make sure like how you're doing with that. And like yeah, just if you're doing good, or if you need any one to talk to. And either something that's very important.

18:49

JH: Yeah, it is important. I do agree with you like the mental health, there are a lot of people who's getting into depression. And there's a lot of people who's actually needing for advice and needing for like, their like therapy session than their everything. Because of just like saying home is not their thing at all, and it affects their mental health. And I'm personally an introvert. So first, like first few months, like first two months, I was actually fine with like staying home and everything but actually, when I went to like third like my third month of like, just like staying at home, I was actually getting like, I don't know, I was just like so like, um, I don't know how to say it but so tired and exhausted of staying at home and everything. So that's when I start actually started like exercising and going to like gym, the gym that it wouldn't work out. But I was doing like a home exercise and everything was just like running around the park. And that's actually how I dealt with my mental health and that helped because just like actually exercising I think made me like think that I'm actually outside then I can like, just like look around and see like different colors and everything. Because staying at home you only see like certain colors and it's just like, you don't like it. But yeah. Yeah. So I dealt with this and I think people should, it's actually good to exercise I think exercise is a good way to like deal with your mental health and that way like depression, because you can focus on other thing other than thing, things other than just like your home and that you're like stuck, and everything. So I think exercising is a good method to and if someone needs like to talk to someone, I actually FaceTime a lot with my friends in America. So just like calling them for like an hour actually helped my mood for the day. Because I just just like talking to them and knowing about what they're doing and telling them what I'm doing just like that simple conversation just helped my mood because it seems like that said a lot of things are there are things that's normal, because and knowing that there are things that's normal actually helps to think that your life is not a total. I don't know. Crap.

21:37

JS: That is a good way I feel like even I did that a lot just like makes you feel closer makes you feel like you're around people and is definitely needed. But yeah, yeah, I think those are all my questions. But hey, thanks for taking the time and I know they're thank

22:02

JH: thank you
